Hongkona, FEBRUARY 5pg, 1885. A Government Gazette Extraordinary issued yesterday afternoon states that " the French Government is about to instruct its naval officers to enforce belligerent rights, including the right of search of neutral ships at sea for contraband of war." The direction arranged under one Alphabet in the strictest to His Excellency the Governor to issue an official notification to that effect has, we presume, been received by telegram. Are we to understand from the telegram that the same rights are about be effectually thwarted, and she may go on to be enforced as regards trade with the whole of the ports of China? The right to search for contraband of war necessarily implies (1) the existence of a state of war, and (2) the right to remove the contraband of war. But unless war exists arms and with mails, &c., from San Francisco to the 10th iltimo, has arrived at Yok hama and will sail munitions cannot be considered contraband; of commerce. Now France has not yet deobserved by Chinese, Mahomedans, Parsees, clared war against China, although she has out to have been the burning of a stack of hay established a partial blockade of Formosa. That blockade has been respected by the Arrivals and Departures of Mails at and from | neutral powers, but so far the trade with the ports on the mainland has gone on uninterruptedly and without any consideration of a state of war prevailing, and arms and munitions of war have been freely ship- lately ped from this colony for the various ports without any idea that they were contraband. Another hypothesis that may be put forward is that the French intend at once to supersede the present "state of reprisals" by a state of actual war, and have notified the would say that the pine so abundantly grown in British Government of their intention to make the formal declaration of war, so that British ships might be warned against having contraband on board when the declaration is actually made. No doubt, like the immortal bard in one of his greatest poems, the Russian Government throw the guilt on opportunity when they calmly tear up solemn compacts or violate written agreements. Opportunity makes the criminal in the case of nations as in that of individuals, and the tearing up of the Treaty of Paris during the France-German war, the seizure of a slice of Manchuria during the last war between England and China, and other acts of a kindred nature by Russia would not have been perpetrated had not opportunity tempted thereto. Such temptations, unfortunately for her neighbours. Russia seems quite unable to withstand; hence the lurking danger always to be feared | seriously. from her when difficulties with other Powers arise. Happily for the interests of other nations, the opportunity for this master move on the political chesaboard has not been afforded to our farseeing but not too scrupulous Russian friends. Japan has cretary. skilfully concluded a convention with Korea securing redress for the recent outrages at Seoul, and China has had the good sense to express her approval of the same and to acknowledge the right of the Japanese Government to demand satisfaction for the murder of Japanese subjects and the destruction of the Legation. The tacit understanding arrived at between Japan and China on this subject and the collision between their troops in Sooul has cut away all prospect of further trouble in the matter, and deprived Russia of any semblance of excuse for attempting intervention in Korea. The intentions and hopes of Russia in this direction are now pretty well understood both in Tokio and Peking, and we may hope, therefore, that Muscovite schemes for aggrandisement at the expense of Korea may closely concerned in this matter. (I).—For three weeks before the 5th January there was no blockeding squadron on the S W. coast of Formosa; no notice was given to either neutrals or Chinese of the suspension of the blockade. A fresh blockade was notified by Admiral Courbet to commence on the 7th, in a notification, in which he declares the earlier blockade to have been provisionally suspended

Wharton states that to raise a blockade established with notification, without issuing due notification to neutrals, is a fraudulent act which no civilized power would be guilty of. There have been only three French war-vossels on the whole S.W. coast a quite insufficient number to maintain a blockade,—and on several occasions, since the 7th January, none have been visible. Now, "blockades in order to be binding

There was intense excitement on shore as each gun was fired, the splash of the shots, as they struck the water, frequently obscuring the boat. In the afternoon the crused by the delay and interruption. The Triomphints and Chateau Renaud captured four junks; as far as could be seen there must have been some display of resistance, in the case of two of the unfortunate reprisals, to warrant the use of machine guns, which were freely used from the tops of the ironclad. According to the maxim that war is not a relation between a man and another, but between state and state, in which private persons are only accidental enemies, not such as men, nor even as members or subjects of the state, but simply as its defenders, the law of nations does not allow that the rights of war and of conquest thence derived should be applied to peaceable, unarmed citizens, to private dwellings and properties, to the merchandise of commerce, to the magazines which contain it, to the vehicles which transport it, to unarmed ships which convey it on streams and seas; in one word, to the persons and goods
